News Release: Air Freight firm expands Bank Service

New London, CT, May 30, 2006. Lawrence Sterling, president of the New London based carrier Royal Air Freight, announced today the addition of a daily freight service between Concordia National Bank branch offices in New Canaan, Bridgeport, and New Haven, and the home office in New London, effective June 14, 2006. The expanded service is made possible by RAF's purchase of two new single-engine Algonquin Turboprops, to be devoted to branch service runs. This brings the total number of aircraft in the RAF fleet to 3. Until now, RAF had been operating a freight service between the above locations just once a week.

At just 35 years of age, Lawrence Sterling is credited with revolutionizing bank transportation systems, allowing the Concordia National Bank to reduce costs by thousands of dollar. Sterling, whose company is 12 months old, states that it has quadrupled its mileage and quintupled its gross profits, in the last five months. According to Sterling, increased financial activity over the last decade necessitated the switch from ground to air carrier service to meet intra-bank deadlines. More recently rising fuel costs have led such banks as CNB to turn to the use of single-engine carrier for cost efficiency. Sterling expects other banks to follow suit and is already in talks with another major banks. If successful, he plans to hire up to twenty additional employees.
